Overview

How good is Tanzania's Public Procurement?

A comparative assessment done by Transparent Public Procurement Rating, rates Tanzania's public procurement at number 11 among 35 countries from Africa, South America, Europe and Eastern Asia based on procurement values, processes and performances.

Does Tanzania still need e-procurement?

Despite the potential provided by e-procurement, Tanzania is yet to fully migrate all its procurement systems. The 2018/2019, PPRA annual performance evaluation report shows that, only 71 procuring entities out of 540 procuring entities have started to use the platform, pointing out continuation of the electronic and paper-based system.

When will procurement activities be allowed outside taneps?

June 2020 has been marked as the deadline for all procuring entities to migrate to TANePS, after which it's anticipated that no procurement activities will be allowed outside the system. In East Africa, Tanzania is one of the three countries that have adopted an e-procurement system, including Kenya and Rwanda.

Do e-tendering practices influence the performance of Public Procurement?

Moreover, based on the results the study concludes that e-tendering practices, e-sourcing practices, e-informing practices, and procurement integrated system has a direct influence on the performance of public procurement.

Which countries have adopted e-procurement in East Africa?

In East Africa, Tanzania is one of the three countries that have adopted an e-procurement system, including Kenya and Rwanda. Moreover, procurement authorities from East African countries have set the adoption of e-procurement as one of their resolutions in the annual East Africa Public Procurement Forum.

How can e-procurement facilitate openness in the procurement cycle?

In line with the open contracting approach, e-procurement should facilitate openness in the procurement cycle through transparency from planning to contract management. This should be inclusive of citizens who can offer constructive criticism in demanding for efficient usage of funds through quality goods and services.
